The Museum of Emotion is a collection of emotional information and stimuli that allow the viewer to explore emotional space. The museum gives the viewer language to describe emotional experience, then stimulates emotional reactions through the five senses. The viewer has a chance to rate his emotion, to capture his natural reaction, and to examine the reactions of other visitors.

The Goals:

1. To allow people to see how they are naturally emotionally expressive and allow them to use this expression to communicate more easily.

2. To give viewers an opportunity to understand how other people conflict with or share their emotional views and to experience the similar and contrasting reactions to a provoking incident.

- Alea Teeters